

Acceptance — Quick Reference

Acceptance is putting down the mental fight. It is your relationship to the situation at large. The broader picture of where you are right now in your life. It is the difference between this shouldn't be happening and really being clear that this is what's happening. It's not about liking the situation, it's not about accepting that it's permanent and there's no use in doing anything.

It's about stopping the argument with the reality you're living right now. So any thoughts that you have about being further along or, this shouldn't be my life, or someone should have been able to fix this. Why is this happening to me, that's resistance. That is the mental fight. So when we are in acceptance, we choose on purpose to put that fight down, not once, many, many times.

Over and over. Every time you notice you're back in the fight, you do not have to figure out how to accept. You just stop resisting. Acceptance is what is left when you stop the fight. This is what's here today. I'm not figuring anything out today. I'm just living today and responding better. That's it.
