

Lesson 14

One Last Thing - Some Tough Love

I want to be very honest with you about how I built this course. Everything I said here was on purpose. I made sure not to include anything that I didn't feel was absolutely necessary because I refuse to fluff this up or give you more than what you actually need. When you're in a sensitized state and you want to get better, and if you made it this far, I have great news for you.

You have what you need. This course cannot save you. I know that sounds harsh, but if you're in a sensitized state, you need to hear this. I needed to hear it too when I was in that state. This course cannot save you. I cannot save you. No coach, no program, no book, no protocol is going to save you. Nothing changes in your life.

If you finish this course and do nothing with it, it will just get added to all the other things you tried that didn't work. The only thing that's gonna get you through is doing the hard work, responding differently when you're terrified, allowing sensations to be there when every single part of you wants to escape.

Reentering life before you feel ready, and bringing in good things like joy, connection, pleasure, even when you still feel terrible. That's the work. No one can do that work for you. I give you the principles, I give you the reminders. I tell you what to expect, but what happens next is completely up to you.

I want to encourage you to revisit these lessons when you need a reminder. When you're in a flare up and you feel like you've forgotten everything, or when you feel like you've veered way off track, or when you're doubting whether or not this works, come back and re-listen, but. I have to give you a warning.

There's a difference between revisiting for reminders and compulsively listening over and over because it feels safer than actually doing the work. At some point, you have to move out of understanding how all of this works, and you have to move into applying it. You have to close the course and go live your life.

If you find yourself listening to these lessons on repeat, ask yourself, am I using this as a tool to avoid the hard part? Flareups are gonna happen. Bad days are gonna happen, symptoms are gonna spike sometimes. Do not let that mean you're back at square one. Healing is not linear. It's never gonna move in a straight line, and it doesn't disappear.

The moment something hard shows up, you don't lose all your progress that you made. But what matters is what you do during a flareup. If you panic and restart the reassurance seeking and going back to researching and treat it like an emergency that just gets you back in the cycle. But if you respond instead of react, if you let it pass without moving everything in your life around, if you trust that your system knows how to settle itself, that is the healing continuing even in the middle of those really hard moments.

I have had so many hard moments like that in my journey. So many, and I did not show up perfectly. You don't have to. Please know that those moments matter a lot. Those are the moments we actually have the opportunity to rewire. If you think about it, you don't get the opportunity to change something when everything's going great.

The only time you get a chance to change it is when things come up. So make sure you handle those days the best way that you can, because that is when it matters the most. One of the biggest mistakes I think people make is assuming that a spike means they need to start the process over. It sends them back into researching mode, and then they find shiny new tools and new protocols and someone else who says something else different.

They treat the flare up like evidence that this isn't working and that that means it's time to find something different. That's how the cycle resets. A spike does not mean that something new is required. It does not mean you're missing something. It usually means that the same response is still needed.

Let it be there. Don't make it mean anything. Don't turn it into another project. Otherwise, you have just stepped right back into the loop. I don't want you walking away from this course thinking that the goal is just to get really good at feeling bad forever. That is not the case. Symptoms do actually heal.

It's not just your relationship to them, the symptoms themselves get better. But here's the thing. The whole point of this course was not to focus on healing specific symptoms. That's not how any of this works. We don't spend all of this time talking about how to make your symptoms go away, because that's not the point.

The symptoms will heal themselves. When you stop reinforcing the alarm, when you stop reacting, when you build that capacity, when you let life back in, when you bring in joy and good things instead of just white knuckling through your suffering. You focus on your response and your life and your nervous system does what it was designed to do.

Eventually, healing stops being something that you think about all the time. It just happens. It happens in the background while you live. That's why you hear so many people say their symptoms went away and they didn't even realize they were gone. They were so engaged in their life that they didn't notice.

And if that feels completely unattainable for you right now, that's really good information. It means you're still way too focused on your symptoms. Life will fill in the gaps. Your attention will go elsewhere. You will not wake up one day and think, oh my gosh, today's the day to I am healed today. You'll realize while you were living, while the fear wasn't running the show anymore, your nervous system did what it needed to do.

That's where all of this is headed for you. This isn't the end of the road. I wanna be clear about something. This course is about getting you out of sensitization. It's about getting you to a place where you have capacity, where you're stable, where your system isn't on fire all of the time. And once you're there.

I like to say the rules change. The game changes. That's when tools can actually help instead of hurt. That's where things like journaling or meditation or visualization become supportive instead of another thing you're forcing yourself to do. That's when you can do deeper work. Maybe the cognitive stuff, the emotional processing, the things that require at least a desensitized nervous system to even be able to access.

But you have to get here first. You have to desensitize before you can regulate. This course is about the first part. So if you've been wondering, is this it? Is this all I do forever? The answer is no. There's more. But this is the foundation. This is what makes everything else possible. And I can confidently say, you have what you need for this stage.

The principles are simple. I'm gonna go over them one more time. Stop reacting, start responding. Let sensations be there. Allow, accept. Bring in good things, reenter life. Before you feel ready, let your life be the regulator. And treat yourself with compassion while you do all of these hard things, you do not need to remember every detail from this course.

You don't have to have it memorized. Please don't memorize it. You don't need to keep working on yourself. There's nothing to fix. You just need to live in a different way. And when I say that I'm including everything I just listed, living differently is the change response. It's the reconnection. It's the joy that you let back in.

So close this course. Go live your life, come back for reminders when you need them. But don't hide in here. The work is out there and I can guarantee you're ready for it.
